The Howard's Library logo is a digital reproduction of the distinctive stamp that George Elliott Howard affixed to his personal books. The stamp is still seen today in several volumes that Howard donated to the University of Nebraska Library in Lincoln. George Elliott Howard (1849-1928) was a distinguished historian and social scientist, a member of the second graduating class at the University of Nebraska in 1876, a nationally-recognized historian, Head of the Department of Sociology at the University of Nebraska, and, in 1917, President of the American Sociological Society.

Information for Contributors

Contributions in the following formats are invited for SOCIOLOGICAL ORIGINS, a peer-reviewed journal devoted to the history and documentation of the early years of sociological inquiry: SOCIOLOGICAL ORIGINS is indexed in CSA Sociological Abstracts and distributed digitally around the world by EBSCO Publishing and ProQuest.

- Original Research Articles (ten to fifteen pages) exploring the history and adventures of early sociological practice and scholarship. Articles exemplify careful documentation, logical development, expository clarity, and critical insight—balanced by good humor, professional courtesy, and lively debate.
- Re-Reviews of Classic or Unheralded Books published before 1940. Short (two to three pages) reviews of insightful but misunderstood or forgotten works, now reconsidered with benefit of hindsight. Each review notes the errors and/or problematic biases, if any, of earlier reviewers.
- Reviews of Recent Books and Articles on the history of sociology are also welcome.
- Archival Documents from the founding era of sociology. Previously unpublished documents—including letters, lectures, flyers, and articles—are selected for their intrinsic value as prescient and instructive windows on the formation and subsequent development of sociology as an intellectual and professional enterprise. Documents are accompanied by brief introductions and may, as necessary, be annotated with a limited number of explanatory endnotes.
- Bio-Bibliographical Entries (eight to ten pages), focus succinctly on the biographical and intellectual histories of specific sociologists from the founding era of sociology. Entries include a short bibliography of the sociologist's most important works. These entries retrieve the lives and contributions of sociologists who are unknown or unheralded today.
- Departmental and Organizational Histories (ten to fifteen pages) document the corporate activities and accomplishments of sociological ventures in the academy and elsewhere.
